

---

Volume 24
Issue 2 Spring/Summer

---

Article 17

6-15-2005

The Weanling

Gerald R. Wheeler

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview>

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, Photography Commons, and the Poetry Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Wheeler, Gerald R. (2005) "The Weanling," Westview: Vol. 24 : Iss. 2 , Article 17.
Available at: <https://dc.swosu.edu/westview/vol24/iss2/17>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at SWOSU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Westview by an authorized administrator of SWOSU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact phillip.fitzsimmons@swosu.edu.

The Weanling

by Gerald R. Wheeler

The weanling colt lay still in a stall, his tan coat thick as carpet, spike mane covered with flecks of dried mud, leaves & strings of yellow hay.

The weather-face man with bad eyes shivers from the cold humid air invading his bones. Bones old as the sagging barn. He kneels on frozen ground, slips on latex gloves, retrieves a scalpel from a box, deftly cuts a small incision in the weanling's throat, blood & poison gushing from lump like burst boil. He meticulously cleanses & dresses the wound, fills a syringe with a creamy liquid. Searches for a soft spot in the colt's shoulder, then plunges the needle, reflecting on the foal he buried a week before.

Two days pass.

The man scans angry sky stampeding dark clouds. He patiently waits for Badger, a 32-year-old, grayed-out roan gelding, the family's guardian of weanlings & injured horses. He's easy to recognize among his grazing herd: only horse that wears a winter horse blanket. Badger gives no quarter to rambunctious mares & younger geldings since blinded in left eye by a charging longhorn when he was a yearling.

The man shifts his tired eyes from the ailing weanling lying in the stall to the pale roan. He says in a raspy voice, "Dusty's contracted the damn strangles. Now he needs special medicine & attention only you can give."

